

This simulated three-dimensional image was generated by a computer from Terrain Resource Inventory Map (TRIM) data produced by the British Columbia Surveys and Mapping Branch. Shading simulates illumination of the land surface by the sun. To enhance subtle features of the landscape, vertical distances have been exaggerated relative to horizontal distances. The faint north-trending grain at some places in the uplands is an artifact of the processing of the digital data.